Abstract

The expression of concept is an important part of depiction of a text, as all the elements are formed and assigned in proportion to each other in order to express the concept. Religious texts, having a high delicacy, make the work difficult for illustrators. They create frameworks that induce repetition in works of the illustrators, especially in religious books for children and young adults, which makes illustrators ignore illustration of such books. In this study we examined the nature of illustrations of religious books for children and young adults, and then provided a brief definition of religious literature. Finally, we reviewed and analyzed the illustrations in four religious books, as the most and least widely read religious books for children and young adults.
